PREFACE.

The present volume contains abstracts of the remaining protocols in Henry Gibsone's second book, and the greater part of the protocols in the first book of his successor, Archibald Hegate. Gibsone held the town clerkship till 1581, and again in (perhaps before) 1596, and for a few years subsequently, but his books between 19th August, 1576, and 29th June, 1598, are not now extant, with the exception of a single leaf containing protocols bearing date 1584-5.

Archibald Hegate, who succeeded Henry Gibsone as town clerk, was a son of William Hegate, burgess of Glasgow, and was admitted a notary by the lords of council and session in May or June, 1581 (Appx. No. I.). At that time Esme, earl of Lennox, cousin of the king, and great chamberlain of Scotland, was provost of Glasgow, and he, "with authorite and command of the Kingis majestie," appointed Hegate town clerk.¹ This innovation on the town's privileges was acquiesced in by an act entered in the burgh court book on 23rd May, 1581; but on 9th September, 1589, the magistrates and council ordered the act to be "deleit and put furth of the buik, as repugnant and maist prejudiciall to the libertie of the toun, they haifand electionn in their awin handis of the said office in all tyme bygane."² Previous to that date, however, Hegate had ceased to be town clerk. He was re-elected by the magistrates and council in May, 1583, and June, 1584. No election is noted in 1585, and the records are wanting between April, 1586, and October, 1588. On 20th May, 1589, "maister Johne Ros" was elected clerk. In 1605 and subsequent years Archibald Hegate again held the office of town clerk, and his protocol books extend in a continuous series from 1581 till 1612.

After a notary ceased to hold the town clerkship, his transactions related chiefly to properties beyond the burgh boundaries; and, accordingly, the main loss to local history occasioned by the disappearance of Henry Gibsone's protocols applies to the period between 1576 and 1581. This is the first large gap in the protocol books subsequent to the Reformation, and it occurs at a time when interesting particulars regarding the disposal of church property and ecclesiastical endowments might have been looked for. No doubt it occasionally happens that a later protocol makes up for one that has disappeared, as in No. 2462, which sufficiently explains what became of the ancient church of St. Tenn; but in many cases the loss of information is complete.

During the early years of Hegate's clerkship there was considerable trouble in municipal and ecclesiastical circles in connection with the appointment of Robert Montgomerie, minister at Stirling, as successor to James Boyd, archbishop of Glasgow;¹ and, for the part he took in the affair, the clerk incurred the displeasure of the presbyterian party. On 9th October, 1582, the general assembly directed "that Coline Campbell, burges of Glasgow, William Hegget, Archibald Hegget, and their complices, be punished according to justice, for the seditioun and uproar made by them, being magistrates and counsellors,² against the students of Glasgow, and shedding their blood;"³ and at the same time it was ordained that certain accomplices of the provost, including "Archibald Hegget," should be excommunicated by the minister of Glasgow "for hanting the companie of Mr. R. Montgomerie, after his excommunication, and other enormiteis committed by them."⁴

As stated in Archibald Hegate's act of admission, the protocol book then supplied to him consisted of one hundred and ninety-three leaves, authenticated by Robert Scott, clerk to the lords of session. This book was regularly written so far as folio 180, where the notary has inserted a statement to the effect that some imprudent person had cut out the next leaf, and that therefore, to avoid suspicion of fraud, he had inserted no further protocols in the book. On four of the remaining leaves have been written the "authorities and notabill placis of Scripture" reproduced in Appendix II.

² No member of council at this time bore the name of "Archibald Hegget," and it is supposed that the town clerk was meant.

The extended topographical knowledge gained by the publication of the protocols renders practicable the compilation of a map of old Glasgow in fuller detail than has hitherto been attempted; and it is intended that one of the three volumes now required to complete the series of Glasgow Protocols will contain a detailed map of at least the section of the city embracing the cathedral and adjacent streets.

It may here be explained that though the headline of the printed Protocols still retains the years of indiction and pontificate, the protocols themselves, at the date now reached, specify neither of these particulars. Shortly after the Reformation the practice became irregular, and gradually ceased altogether; but there was no fixed rule on the subject, each notary apparently following his own inclination. There being thus no definite termination of the custom, it was thought as well to keep up both indiction and pontificate as items of chronological information.

Robert Scott was clerk of session for a considerable period. In 1563-4 he authenticated, by his signature,

William Hegate's three protocol books (see Glasgow Protocols, iii. p. 60). On 7 September, 1574, "Robert Scott, traveller," was admitted a freeman and burgess of Glasgow, and his burgess dues given to him gratis

On 12 August, 1575, the town treasurer of Glasgow paid £6 "for wyne propynit to Robert Scott, scribe in Edinburcht, the tyme of his being in this toun" (Ib. p. 452).

Part of the paper having been worn off, the lost portion of the notary's sign has been supplied in dotted lines.

³ Translation—Here the people are accompanied by the angel of the Lord, and so the Lord, through the guardianship of angels, ceases not to protect his faithful and elect here in this world, imperilled both in mind and body, which is sure. Therefore they are impious and profane words and blasphemies which are against the knowledge and wisdom of angels.

from 1 November, 1559, to 1 November, 1560 (p. 142), in which credit is taken for two barrels of herrings delivered to the Friars Minors of Stirling and Glasgow by gift of the King and Queen (Francis and Mary). This would seem to indicate that the friars were not dispersed before November, 1559.

¹ Written "rectoris," but apparently a clerical mistake for "vicarii de Lenzee." The rectory of Lenzie, otherwise called Kirkintilloch, was, in the end of the twelfth century, bestowed upon the monks of Cambskenoeth, with whom it remained till the Reformation. Sir Richard Herbertson, the vicar, also held the chaplainry of St. Mary, in the parish church of Cadder (see protocol 1747).

² Elsewhere called Mutiland Croft, as in last volume of Protocols. Earlier forms were Muthal Croft, in 1454;

and Mutal Croft, in 1487 (Munimenta Fratrum Predicatorum, Maitland Club, pp. 174-200). Mut-hall is suggestive of moot hall or council meeting place, but the earliest tolbooth of which there is trace was on the north, while the croft was on the south, side of the Trongate. There may, however, have been a still earlier "moot hall" on the south side.

2325. PAULL. 24 July, 1581, 10 a.m.

¹ As stated in the footnote to No. 1941, the manse of the archdeacon came into the possession of Sir Mathew Stewart of Minto, and subsequently the town house of the Duke of Montrose occupied the site. The above protocol (No. 2324) narrates how the property parted from the archdeaconry. At the time of the Reformation, Alexander Dick was archdeacon, and Andrew Beton was appointed as his successor in 1560 (see protocol 1398 and relative footnotes). The church of Peebles had from the 13th century continued to be the benefice of the archdeacon, and when, subsequent to the Reformation, other ecclesiastical dues ceased, the teinds pertaining to that church and the Glasgow manse would form the main source of revenue. For rebellion against the King's authority and taking part in the siege of Glasgow castle, in May, 1570, Betoun's benefice was forfeited to the Crown (Privy Council, Reg. xiv., pp. 64, 65), though it may possibly have been restored. When the church assembly, held at Leith, in January, 1571-2, made arrangements for the election of an archbishop of Glasgow, "Mr. James Greer" was, for the purposes of that election, appointed to supply the place of the archdeacon in the chapter (Calderwood's Hist. iii. p. 190); but this may have been either on account of the forfeiture or in consequence of Beton being disqualified through failing to make "profession of the true religion." The archdeaconry was apparently vacant in 1573, as King James VI., on 8 June of that year, presented Archibald Dowglas, brother of the laird of Cavers, to the office (Fasti Ecclesie, i. p. 235). The Leith assembly had resolved that "all benefices of cure, under prelates, should be disposed to actual ministers, and to no others" (Spottiswoode's History, ii. p. 171); and as Douglas had, in accordance with the rules then in force, to give personal attention in his parochial charge, the Glasgow manse could not be used as a residence, and he accordingly disposed of it, as mentioned in the protocol. The feu-duty is not specified in the protocol, but from the crowe charter granted to Sir Matthew Stewart of Minto, on 22 March, 1596-7, it is mentioned that the amount then payable was 40s., with 3s. 4d. of augmentation (Reg. Mag. Sig. vi. No. 544.)

the lands "came into the hands of John lord Fleming, who disposed them to his second son, James, in 1593. In course of time they went out of the hands of the Flemings and became the property of the Earls of Dundonald." ¹The collegiate church of Biggar was founded by Malcolm lord Fleming, with the concurrence of the archbishop and chapter of Glasgow, on 10 January, 1545; and had endowments for a provost, eight prebendaries, four singing boys, and six poor men. John Stevenson, precentor of the metropolitan church of Glasgow, was the first provost; and Hunter enumerates various subsequent appointments. The provost named in the text was probably William Fleming, son of John Fleming of Carwood, who was presented to the provostship by Lord Fleming on 1st January, 1573 (Biggar and the House of Fleming, pp. 179-99).

²The lands of Boghal and Haddockstane, in the shire of Renfrew, were conferred to Malcolm Fleming of Boghal and Isabella of Houstoun, his spouse, by crown charter, dated 15 June, 1451 (Reg. Mag. Sig. ii. No. 568); and crown charters were also granted to his successors. Boghall and Haddockstane are places which can still be identified, being situated at a short distance from each other in the parish of Houstoun, Renfrewshire.

Boghall seems to have been latterly the designation of a lordship or barony, embracing several lands. In the year 1672 the lands of Mylnetoun and Arrotisholl, in the parish of Kilbride, were dissolved from the barony and mortified by William earl of Dundonald (see the first of the two preceding footnotes), and William lord Cochrane, his eldest son, to the university of Glasgow, for the maintenance of four students of philosophy, and also for the support of three students of theology (Mun. 2412. WILSOUN—LYNDSAY, SPOUSES. 22 May, 1582, 5 p.m.

John Hammiltoun of Brwmehill appeared in the porch (podio) of the fore tenement aftermentioned, and acknowledged that James Wilsoun and Jonet Lyndsay, spouses, had lawfully redeemed an annualrent of £20 (redeemable for £200), payable furth of their great tenement, fore and back, with yard and pertinents, lying t.e., on the south side of the Gallowgait,

² Gallowmuir was at one time possessed by the community as common pasturage; but in the year 1529 sixteen acres were given as an endowment to the collegiate church of St. Mary (Glasg. Chart. ii. pp. 109-12), and previous to the date of the above protocol the remainder had been disposed of by the magistrates and council to individual proprietors for payment of feuduties or annualrents. Subsequent to the Reformation the church acres were likewise conveyed to individual purchasers. (See protocols 151A, 193-4, 213-5, 743, 877-8, 895, 901, 923). Burrofeild, on the other hand, does not seem to have belonged to the community in ancient times. As shown by entries in the Diocesan Registers the lands were held by the Bishops' rentallers, and in course of time the rental rights were converted into feu holdings. Thus on 2 June, 1513, Elizabeth Elphinstoun and Peter Culquhoun, her son, were rentalled in the 40s. land of Bowrowfeild (Diocesan Reg. i. p. 48). In 1520 Thome Forrat was "rentellat in xls. land off the Borrwfeild, and xls. land of Nycolleys, quhilk was the wedos, Augnes Sulstar, and off hyr consent, becaus he maryt the wedo" (Ib. p. 75). After the latter lands had been held on rental for about sixty years, Archbishop Boyd, with consent of his chapter, granted a charter to William Forret, eldest son of Thomas Forret, whereby the "40s. land of Borroufeild" and the "40s. land of Nicholhous" were appointed to be held by him for payment of an annual feuduty of £4, and the charter was confirmed by the crown on 24 March, 1585-6 (Reg. Mag. Sig. v. No. 958). Similarly, charters were granted to Robert Wilkie, minister of Kilmarnock, of a 20s. land of Burrowfeild (Ib. No. 657), which afterwards came into the possession of John Hay, rector of Renfrew. The name "Nicolleys" seems to have fallen into disuse, and the combined properties were latterly known as the £6 land of Barrowfeild. The villages of old and new Calton, formed on feus given off by the successive owners, were erected into a burgh of barony in 1817, but the burgh was annexed to Glasgow in 1846. For the history of Barrowfeild during its possession by the Walkinshaws, Orrs, and subsequent proprietors (including the City of Glasgow between 1724 and 1731), reference may be made to Mr. John Buchanan's sketch in "Glasgow: Past and Present" (1846), pp. 715-30. The original feuduties are now payable to the crown.

¹ "Royse noble," an English gold coin marked with the device of a rose. By act of parliament of the reign of James III. (1466 c. 12) "the new noble of the rose" was to have currency in Scotland for 25s. In the Edinburgh accounts for 1552-3, the value of the rose noble is put at £3 8s. Scots (Edin. Rec. ii. p. 274). Erskine, in his Institute of the Law of Scotland (B. ii. tit. 8, s. 2), refers to a gratuitous disposition by a father to his son being redeemable on payment of a rose noble. Several protocols contain a similar provision, so that the practice must have long prevailed in this country. (See also Stair, B. ii. tit. 10, s. 19). A grant so made was in effect a donation revocable by the father during his lifetime. To obviate the inconvenience which might arise from want of a specified coin it was provided by the act 1555, c. 10, that in the case of lands being redeemable for gold or silver "of certane speciall valour and price or cunzie," if such money could not be had within the realm, it would be sufficient to deliver current gold or silver money of equal value.

The duties devolving on the new commissaries are alluded to in an act of the privy council in 1575, which narrates that "eftir the abolishing of the papistical jurisdiction and religioun within this realme, thair wes certane commissaris constitute be the Quene, beand autoritie for the tyme for decisioun of beneficiall and matrimoniall caussis, confirmatioun of testamentis and utheris" (Ib. ii. p. 455). "Beneficiall caussis" meant questions relating to church benefices, including teinds. The pursuit of tenants before the commissary of Glasgow for payment of teinds was approved of by the privy council on 2 February, 1574-5 (Ib. p. 430). Archibald Betoun is designed as commissary in a protocol dated 31 August, 1571 (No. 1787), but the date of his appointment has not been ascertained. The subdean's manse must have been acquired by him subsequent to 17 March, 1570-1, on which date it was transferred to "Mr David Conyghame and Katherine Wallace, his spouse." (See protocol No. 1734). Cunningham was subdean for a few years before he got the bishopric of Aberdeen in 1577. (See footnote to protocol No. 842).

² The Stablegreen residence of the Lennox family was acquired by Mathew the second earl in 1509 (Diocesan Reg. i. pp. 446-7), and was, subject to some interruptions (see protocols Nos. 55, 290), possessed by successive earls till the date of the above protocol. It is probable that the interviews between Queen Mary and her husband during his illness took place here, though there is some uncertainty on the point (see Rottenrow: Regality Club, 2nd series, pp. 54, 56, 58). Esme seventh earl and first duke of Lennox parted with the property, as narrated in the protocol, on the eve of his forced departure from the country, and while he was residing in Dumharton castle, where he had taken refuge after the Raid of Ruthven. As will be seen from subsequent protocols (Jaonary and February, 1584-5), the main part of the property, if not the whole of it, described as extending from the "new hospital" at the North Port, on the north, to the entry to the "orchard" on the south, was disposed of in four separate lots, having a cumulo frontage to the street of 64 ells.

The church dedicated to St. Thenau, the mother of St. Mungo, is of unknown antiquity, and it long continued a landmark of the city, giving its name to one of the principal thoroughfares. After running a course of varying orthography (see Mr. J. T. T. Brown's paper in Regality Club, 2nd series, p. 127), the name has settled into its present form, and the St. Enoch's Church of to-day commemorates the existence, if it does not occupy the precise site, of the mediæval structure. A writ, dated 27 October, 1426, refers to the great street leading from the market cross to the chapels of St.

Thomas the Martyr and of St. Tanew (Liber Coll. Nostre Domine, etc., p. 244). This is the earliest notice of the chapel found in extant records, but subsequent notices, including those in the protocols, are numerous. A charter, dated in 1475, refers to the chapel where rest the bones of St. Thenew, the mother of St. Kentigern (Reg. Episc. Glasg. No. 478); but perhaps this means nothing more than that some portions of what were accepted as her relics were deposited in the chapel. Among the relics preserved in the cathedral in 1432 were "two small linen bags, with bones of SS. Kentigern, Thenew, and other divers saints" (Dillon's Inventory, translated in Gordon's Scotchchronicon, ii. p. 452). At the Reformation such objects of veneration were considered idolatrous and specially singled out for destruction. Any relics then in the chapel would therefore, doubtless, disappear. From the above protocol it is ascertained that the church itself had been converted into a barn. James Fleming, who acquired the collegiate church of St. Mary in the Trongate (see protocol 1702), had probably got St. Tenew's chapel and grounds under similar circumstances. Though applied to secular uses, the building seems to have retained its external form for some time. Woodrow, in his "Collections for the Life of David Weems" (Maitland Club, 1818), p. 5, mentions that in the Kirk Session Records, under date 5 May, 1595, "St. Ennis Kirk in the Trongate is spoken of, I take it to be what is vulgarly called Saint Tennochis." M'Ure, in his History of Glasgow, published in 1736, referring to churches and chapels before the Reformation, mentions "St. Enoch's church, without the West Port, the remains of which is yet to be seen" (1830 edition, p. 62).

² These lands were feued to James Flemyng in 1568-9, as narrated in protocol No. 1607. William Flemyng produced the feu charter to the town council on 18 June, 1595, and in the council minute the feu is described as extending from Balgray dykes on the north to the great bill on the south, and having the highway to Bishopbriggs on the west, and a moss on the east (Glasg. Witnesses: Sir Robert Coninghame, prebendary of Glasgow primo,¹ James Mureheid, merchant, Walter Bowe, merchant, citizens, Richard Tod and John Pattoun, serjeants.

¹ The prebend of Glasgow primo had for centuries been an adjunct of the parsonage of Glasgow. Mr. Archibald Douglas obtained the parsonage in 1570, and his demission did not take place till 1597 (Glasg. Charters, i. pp. dlix). In 1580, however, Douglas having been accused before the privy council of complicity in the murder of Darnley, fled to England, and parliament pronounced a decree of forfeiture against him in November, 1581. By a charter, under the great seal, dated 1 May, 1586, the forfeiture was annulled, and shortly afterwards a jury acquitted Douglas of the crime on which he was charged (Hugo Arnot's Criminal Trials (1785), pp. 7-20; Reg. Mag. Sig., v., No. 983). Sir Robert Coninghame seems to have got possession of the prebend during the subsistence of the forfeiture, but how this was accomplished, and for what period the arrangement continued, are particulars which have not been ascertained.

In the footnote to protocol No. 2116, it was incorrectly stated that Alexander Lauder held the parsonage of Glasgow "before the Reformation." Henry Sinclair, who was at one time president of the court of session, and latterly bishop of Ross, possessed the parsonage from about the year 1548 till his death, on 2 January, 1564-5 (Keith's Catalogue (1824), pp. 193-4; protocol, No. 643). Sinclair was succeeded by "maister Alexander Lawder," as shown by an act of the privy council, dated in October or November, 1566 (Privy Council Reg. i. p. 492).

Sasine given to James Flemyng by Mr. Adam Wallace, bailie. 2517. ELPHINSTOUN—SCOT, SPOUSES. Eodem die, 7 a.m.

Archibald Mure and Elizabeth Weddrop, spouses, sold to George Elphinstoun and Marion Scot, spouses, a barn, lying t.c., on the north side of the street called Sanctenais gait, going from the West Port to the church (templum) called Sanctenais Kirk, then belonging to James Flemyng, between the barn belonging to George Elphinstoun and Marion Scot, spouses, on the west, the barn of John Andirsoun on the east, and the croft called the Langercroft on the north. Sasine given by Mr. Adam Wallace, bailie.

¹ James Flemyng acquired St. Mary's church, on the south side of the Trongait, in 1570, and transferred it to the magistrates and council about the year 1592, as narrated in protocol No. 1702 and relative footnote; and it is probable that the "Belhous" was included in these transmissions. On 20 December, 1595, instructions were given for the town treasurer of the year 1593 accepting a sum of mooney in full of the "mail of the Belhous," one half of the "mail" or rent being remitted "in respect the steple was tane downe" (Rec. i., 175). Another steple, however, appears to have been erected, as on 22 February, 1594-5, the provost, bailies, and town council, in recognition of the services rendered by Archibald Fanlis, merchant, in attending to the "re-edifying of the Trone Church," for three years, granted to him two booths forming "parts of their New Kirk steple" (Glasgow Charters, i.; Abstract, p. 37, No. 407). These two booths were re-acquired by the town council in 1631 (Ib. p. 75, No. 535), at which time the steple was being heightened, and other alterations made, of which particulars will be found in the printed records. Thus on 27 January, 1630, it was resolved "as ane common weill of the burgh, that the stiple of the Trongait Kirk sall be hightit in the most best and commodious forme can be deysit be the best craftismen, with all diligence possible" (Glasg. Rec. i. p. 373). Payments towards the work were authorised in December, 1630, and February, 1631 (Ib. ii. pp. 1, 2). Then on 19 March, 1631, there occurs the following entry in the records which appears to refer to the "Belhous" mentioned in the text, as distinguished from the steple erected in connection with the renovated church of 1592; though, taken in conjunction with other passages in the records, it is possible that the structures may have been connected:—"The provest, bailleis and counsall hes concludit to tak down to the grund the hail bellhous in the Trongait, haith new wark and auld" (Ib. ii. p. 3).

M'Ure, in his History of Glasgow (1830 edition, p. 59), thus describes the steple as it existed in 1736:—"The community . . . built a handsome steple or spear before . . . but not adjoining to the church, in the year 1637. At the bottom of the steple there is a trone or a place for weighing of goods. . . . The city have also furnished the steple with two large bells that rings at six, eight, and ten of the clock at night, and at six in the morning, all the year over, and on the Lord's day, and other week days of sermon; but there is no clock in it, because it is situate near the tolbooth clock on the one hand, and Hutcheson's clock on the other, being all three on one street, which, without doubt, is the fairest in the whole city. The steple of this church is 126 foot high." The date of erection given by M'Ure has been followed by other historians, and that year may have been reached before all the fittings were completed, as a bell for the steple was got in 1636 (Glasg. Rec. ii. p. 41); but the work was evidently commenced some years earlier. In consequence of its detached position the steple escaped the conflagration by which the church was destroyed in 1793; and at the present day it forms one of the most interesting relics of Old Glasgow, with a history which can be traced back to 1631, if not forty years earlier.

Witnesses: Thomas Mowat, servitor of George Elphinstoun, Archibald Mure, son and apparent heir of the said Archibald and Elizabeth Weddrop, and Andrew Andirsoun, serjeant. Ratified by Elizabeth Weddrop. Property to be redeemable for 40 merks.

Club), pp. 22, 23). In the town's accounts for 1583-4, the sum of 40s. was paid to "Mr. William Strutheris for to pay the mail of ane sange scole" (Glasg. Rec. i. p. 472). The "reader" and "teacher of musick" are, it is presumed, identical with the "Sir William Strutheris" who, in 1576-7, was paid 40s. "for male of ane chalmer to be ane sang scole" (Ib. p. 462). The prefix "Sir" indicated that Struthers was a chaplain, and the "Mr." shows that subsequently he had acquired the degree of master of arts.

¹ The annualrent is stated to be redeemable for 40 merks, but this may be a clerical slip, as the redemption money was usually the same as the price. A return of 5 merks on £40 represents about 8 per cent., a not unusual rate at that period, though 10 per cent. was more common. According to the canon law, enforceable in this country previous to the Reformation, a stipulation for payment of interest was not allowed; but after that law fell into abeyance, there was for some time no limit to the rate which might be stipulated. A Scottish statute (1587, c. 52 of the 1681 edition of the acts; 1587, c. 35, supplemented by 1597, c. 18 of the Record edition) restricted the profit to be taken for the loan of money to 10 per cent.; and the legal rate was from time to time reduced by subsequent acts of parliament (see Erskine's Institute, B. iii. tit. iii. s. 75, 76). These limitations, however, were abolished by the "Usury Laws Repeal Act" of 1854.

Reg. Episc. Glasg. No. 341, p. 344). The name of "Mr. Thomas Archibald, rector of Cardross," occurs in a protocol dated 10th March, 1574-5 (No. 1043). A few years previously "Mr. Thomas Archibald," chamberlain to Archbishop Betoun, is sometimes referred to in the protocols, but the identity of the chamberlain and the rector has not been established. On 6 April, 1575, the rector sold the site of his manse in the Drygate (situated between Ashkirk manse, which fronted the street, on the west, and the Malindinor Burn on the east) to George Hucheson, son of Thomas Hucheson, burgess of Glasgow, but reserving right to hospitality in the manse when he (the rector) and his successors resided in Glasgow (Reg. Mag. Sig. iv., No. 2664).

² In 1494, Archibald Whitelaw, subdean of Glasgow, endowed the chaplainry of St. John the Baptist with two acres of land in the Deanside; and his successor, Roland Blacader, made a similar donation (see Archbishop Eyre's paper on "The Old Arrangements of the Glasgow Cathedral" in Transactions of the Glasgow Archaeological Society, new series, i. 483; and authorities cited; also Blacader's deed of foundation, printed in Glasgow Protocols, ii. No. 618). As stated in protocol No. 1375, Sir William Crawford, chaplain of the chaplainry of St. John, fenced six acres of land in the "Deynsyd" to Mr. Robert Herbertsoun, whose son disposed of the property as set forth in the above protocol No. 2598.

The lands contained in the protocol appear to be part of those acquired by Hutchesons' Hospital from Andrew Cochrane in 1741, and transferred by the hospital to the magistrates and council of Glasgow in 1772 (MS. Inventory of City Writs, ii. h. 25). In the disposition to the hospital in 1741 the property is described as "these seven acres and a half of land or thereby, now inclosed in a yeard, lying within the territory of the burgh of Glasgow, in that croft called the Deanside; bounded between the lands of (blank) on the west, Ramshorn yeard on the south, the lands of (blank) on the east, and the Rattounraw Street on the north; together with that large barn, thereafter a dwellinghouse and barn, the dwellinghouse being now ruinous, adjoining to and on the north side of the said yeard; as the same are presently posset by John Maitland, John Garner, James Maitland, William Aikine, Arthur Hamilton, Duncan M'Auslan, William Reid, and John Logan, all gardineris in Glasgow." Deanside was disposed of by the magistrates and council, in building lots, about the year 1787, and is now occupied by buildings, between George Street and Rottenrow, a little to the east of Frederick Street.

charter whereby David Hammiltounne, chaplain of the chaplainry of Drumry, with consent of John Hammiltounne of Drumry, patron thereof, and Malcolm Craufurd of Kilbirny, for his interest, granted to the said Thomas Craufurd and spouse, the £5 land of Jordanhill, lying in the parish of Renfrew.¹ Charter subscribed and sealed at Edinburgh, 16 February, 1582, in presence of William Coninghame, younger of Glengarnok, John Colquhoun of Kilmardony, and William Craufurd, brother of Malcolm. Sasine given on the ground of the lands by James Craufurde, as bailie in hac parte. Witnesses: James Craufurde, younger of Mounok, Andrew M'Yndo in Jordanhill, Peter M'Yndo, tailor, Thomas Irvyn, servitor of the said Thomas, and Daniel Ker.

2600. COLQUHOUNE—CONYGHAME. 3 December, 1584, 9 a.m.

William Conyghame, bailie and citizen of Glasgow, resigned in favour of himself and Elizabeth Colquhoun, his spouse, and l.l., a tenement, fore and back, with small yard and pertinents, sometime belonging to q. Andrew Campbell, lying t.c., on the west side of the street leading from the market cross to the South Nether Port, between the lands of q. Eduard Scott on the south, and the lands of q. David Wilsoun on the north. Sasine given by Robert Rowat, bailie. Witnesses: William Andersone, cooper, citizen, John Pawtoun and William Stobo, officers.

2601. WILSONE—ALLANE. 2 February, 1584-5, 9 a.m.

John Herbertsone, son of q. Mr. Robert Herbertsounne, sold to Patrick Wilsone, citizen, and Agnes Allane, spouses, and l.l., a fore tenement, under and above, with the pertinents, lying t.c., on the east side of the street leading from the metropolitan church to the market cross, between the lands of q. George Swan on the south, the lands sometime of William Smyth on the east, the wynd of the Friars Preachers, commonly called Freir Vennell, on the north, and the street on the west. Sasine given by William Conyghame, bailie. Witnesses: John Wilsoun, tinsmith, Thomas Huchesoun

The charter referred to in the text must have been a renewal, and not a new grant, as Thomas Crawford had the territorial designation "of Jurdaoehill" at least as early as 1564 (see protocols Nos. 1506 and 1734). "Thomas Crawford of Jordanhill" was elected provost of Glasgow in 1577 (Glasg. Rec. i. p. 62). In Anderson's "Scottish Nation" (1865), i. p. 705, it is stated that Thomas Crawford had, previous to 1561, "with consent of his eldest brother, Hew Craufurd of Kilbirnie received from Sir Bartholomew Montgomery, chaplain of Dalry, the lands of Jordanhill . . . and the grant was confirmed by a charter under the great seal, dated 8 March, 1565-6." Such a charter, however, is not found in the printed Register.

showed to the editor these two instruments bearing the same distinguishing mark. It was then seen that the documents related to a period for which there is no existing protocol book, and Mr. Robb kindly lent them for the purpose to which they are now applied.
